The progress made in Vietnam during the past year is certainly remarkable. On the American side, this has been made possible by having top-caliber people there, both in the civilian and military fields, led by a first-class ambassador in the person of Frederick Nolting. You can be sure that [redacted] is proud to be serving with such a fine group.

I know that [redacted] will particularly appreciate your letter, coming as it does from a person with your background in the Guerrilla Warfare and Counterinsurgency fields.

I most certainly will place your letter in [redacted] personnel file and send copies of these letters to him.

Dear John:

I would like officially to commend your station chief in Saigon, [redacted]

As you know, I first visited Saigon just a year ago immediately following a United States decision to support the Vietnamese Government in its struggle against the organized Communist terrorism there. [redacted] took over the station just as this support began to arrive and just as the Vietnamese embarked on the strategic hamlet and Montagnard programs. Just one year later, in January of this year, I visited Saigon again. There was, in the intervening months, an enormous improvement in the situation in which your organization played a very significant role. Much of the credit for the improvement in the situation belongs to [redacted] especially in the [redacted] program and in the vastly improved intelligence that the government forces are now receiving about Viet Cong activities.

I would be grateful if a copy of this letter could be put in [redacted] personnel file.

Sincerely,

Roy
Roger Hilsman

Director, Central Intelligence Agency,

OFFICE OF THE DEPUTY DIRECTOR

DCI:

I am totally unexcited —

This paper does not even address itself to the key questions:

1. Who pulls the trigger
2. To what purpose
3. At what time
4. On what targets —

All of which must be answered for ICBMs as well as satellites —
Against neither of which any of us has a defense
